

MOODY

BLUES

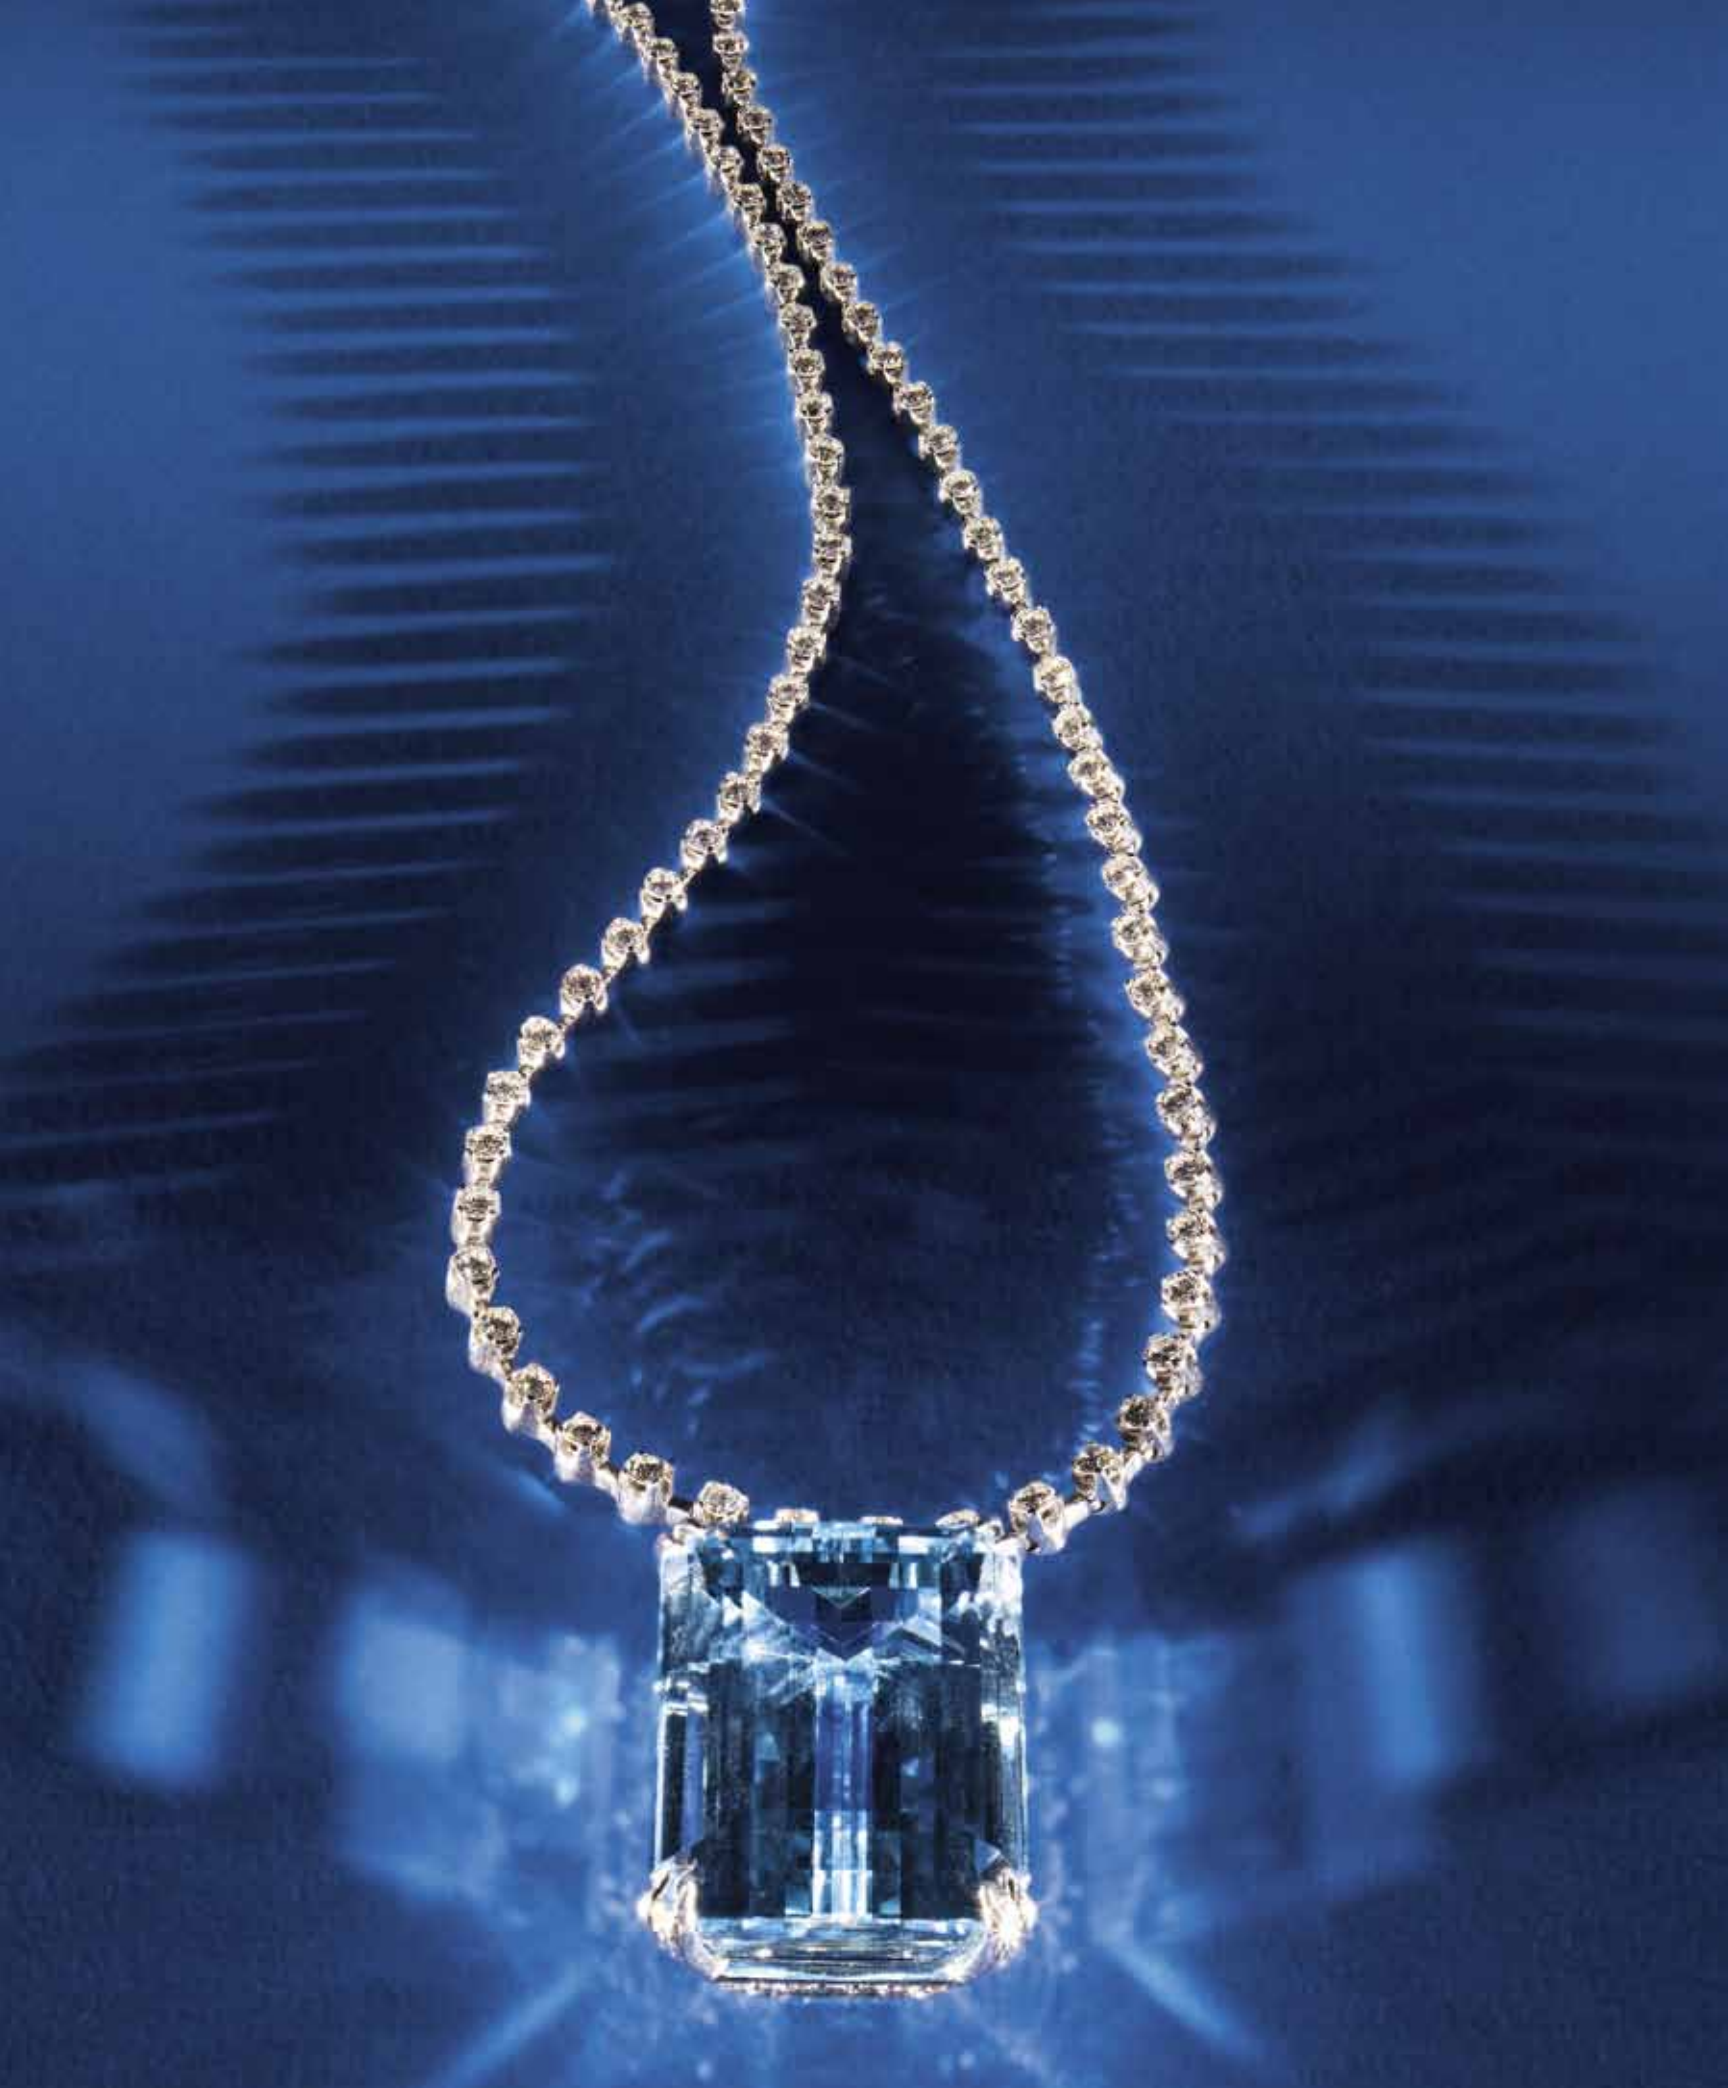

BY SHANNON ADDUCCI

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JAMES WOJCIK STYLED BY AMANDA ROSS

The aquamarine, which seems to have come from some mermaid's treasure house in the depths of a summer sea, has charms not to be denied." So wrote Roman philosopher Pliny. Here, Adria de Haume aquamarine earrings with diamond bows ($49,000) float with Seaman Schepps topaz-and-sapphire Pompadour earrings (top, $7,200) and Tito Pedrini Artigli topaz earrings ($18,500). Opposite: The neon-hued Paraiba tourmaline is found only in Brazil. David Yurman 36-carat Paraiba cabochon ring (price upon request). For details, go to page 197.

+

PROP STYLING BY LINDEN ELSTRAN

*B*lue sapphires were favored by kings, emperors and the clergy for their supposed ability to reflect heaven and ward off evil. These celestial earrings from Bulgari's high-jewelry collection (price upon request) have two cabochon sapphires that total almost 33 carats and are surrounded by 100 round- and pear-shaped diamonds. Opposite: An H.Stern diamond necklace ($64,500) sparkles with a 20-carat-emerald-cut aquamarine pendant.

Sapphires are also said to inspire creativity and strengthen the intellect. To see why, look no further than this De Grisogono diamond necklace with 30 blue sapphires (price upon request) and Solange Azagury-Partridge blackened-gold Cup ring with sapphire and diamonds ($53,000). Opposite: A 20-carat-cushion-cut sapphire and diamond ring from Graff (top, price upon request) paired with a five-carat sapphire and diamond ring by Chopard (price upon request).

